Wanted a Glass of Water. After a stay of some months in Vienna I went up to Nuremberg, and from there to the Streiburg Wheycure, where I hoped to eperate from the effects of the cholera I had in Vienna. At this place you get nothing to drink but whey, except in the hen they let you have c rolls. No water or milk or anything but whey is allowed, and I could not drink it. Every time I did it seemed as if I should die were always thirsty.

I could not speak a word of German, and even if I could have done so a Bavarian could not have understood it. The vice consul's denghter, who had come up with me from Nuremburg, had been my translator, but she went on a long walk, and when the man from the "Curhaus" brought the fatal glasses of whey I determined to have a drink of water, and so by showing him a florin, talking and by dumb show I made him, as I fondly hoped, understand that every time I even naw a glass of whey it created a revolution in my internal economy and I wanted a drink of water. At last he brightened and I fels that I had for once succeeded in introducing an idea into a Dutch head; but he sat down the glass of whey and disappeared, nodding his head reassuringly. I waited patiently for a long time, when he at last appeared ringing with him, not a glass of water, but a carpenter's brace and bit! Thus behad in ed my intelligent pantomine.-Olive derper in Philadelphia Times.

EXCITING CEREMONIES WITNESSED BY A CORRESPONDENT.

Religionists Who Exercise a Powerful Influence in Turkey-A Frenzied Child of 3 Years-A Human Corduroy Road Trying to Nerves.

We set out after an early lunch to witness some of the religious rites of the Reface, or the howling dervishes. These are but one of the numerous orders of dervishes who wield an irresistible influence over the public mind in Turkey. Their notable Take is a condition, is to be consigned to our market, low, weather beaten old building, standing on the edge of the great cypress shaded Turkish cemetery that crowns the heights of Sen torie, and is almost as dilapidated as most of the monuments and gravestones that surround it. When we entered we found the best seats for observation nearly all appropriated by a large party of American tourists with guide books in hand, fully determined to "take it all in."

The space allotted to the "howlers" was also well filled, yet a good many, both of young and old, were still coming, and after going forward to where the high priest sat, they reverentially bowed to the dust, then taking the priest's hand, gently kissed it and retired. Directly behind the priest was a small alcove, painted a bright green, and filled with a variety of antique small arms, swords, daggers, battle axes, etc. On the walls were many mottoes or sentences in frames, and some prayer rugs. A small brazen censer containing burning frankincense and spices, filled the room with aromatic fragrance,

ROWS OF SPECTATORS.

Around three sides of the low room were gaileries, some closely latticed and occupied by Turkish women; others open and filled with curious spectators like ourselves. The best location was reserved for Turkish gentlemen and soldiers. Beneath these galleries was still another, elevated a step or two above the main floor, and separated from it by a low railing, and furnished with seats for spectators. On the main floor were spread many rugs of Angora goatskin, on which were seated old men, regular patri-archs in appearance, while two groups of little children were ranged behind them. Seated close to the low railing were rows of men clothed in the flowing Dervish mantle and tan colored "galuph," a tall, brimless felt hat, strongly resembling an inverted flower pot, bound round the head by a long black scarf, with ends left flowing. These ends were at intervals in the course of the service tenderly pressed to the lips. At other times the eyes were carefully wiped with these mourning badge Conspicuous before the high priest stood a lithe figure, with a pale, cadaverous countenance, but a keen, penetrating eye, who was slowly manipulating a long, white scarf. He first threw it around his shoulders, thus symbolizing the all embracing love of Allah; then, binding it tightly about his waist, he began tying and untying it, each knot hav-ing a particular significance. His whispered words will bear this interpretation: "I tie up greed; I untie charity. I tie up hate; I untie love. I tie up pride; I untie humility." And so on through a long list. Then began a monotonous chant that soon swelled to a tremendous howl. All rose to their feet and kept time with swaying body and jerking head in a frantic manner. The old and feeble among them gradually dropped out of the circle and took seats on the rugs near the center of the room, beside the rows of standing children. At length the eyes of the spectators became riveted upon the face and figure of a little 3-year-old baby, who stood for two long hours swaying its frail body in perfect unison with the der-visios, and with his rosy, cherub mouth uttering the same indescribably impressive cry of Allah! When the rude throng had at length worked themselves up to a state of religious frenzy the little boy also rolled his bright eyes about as if beholding a heavenly

To my mind nothing was so impressive as the power of endurance shown by the infants on exhibition. I shudder when I think of the torture they must have been subjected to in the private drill necessary to prepare them for such a performance in public. Some of the children seemed free to pass in and out at will, but the tiny boy speken of above and a little girl (a hunchback) never left their posts a minute nor ceased to sway their boshes and shout until the performance was concluded by a louder chapping and howling, more violent jerking of the head and wilder tumuit than before. Then a sudden hush, when, without a signal or look from any one, this lovely a signal or look from any one, tass lovely little baby demurely marched up to the high priest to receive his blessing, then laid him down, his face to the ground before the venerable man. Then other children followed. First came the little hunchback, then three or four at a time, finally ten or twelve laid down, forming a human "corduroy road" for the high priest to walk over, until at least twenty children had thus received his blessing and had the evil spirit driven out of them. THE STRONGYLOCENTROTUS.

A New Edible for Gourmands that Tielded by the Sea.

A new delicacy of marine origin, and sur passing, in the opinion of many gourmands, the finest oysters is about to be introduced into this country. A supply of the true Mediterranean sea urchias, in good and English epicures will be asked to try the eggs of the echnidean after the fashion of Marseilles—that is, by eating them off the shells, raw and uncooked. The sea urchin, which scientific men with the playful simpli-city characteristic of the kind, have agreed to designate the strongylocentrotus, is an article of food in many parts of the world, as most people are probably awars. Hence one of the common names it bears among fisherfolk who have no reputation for learning to keep up, and who call it the sea egg.

But all along the shores of the Mediterra-nean the five celled rosette forming the inside of the prickly creature is estremed one of the tastiest morsels yielded by the sea. Strangers visiting the Marseilles fish market will see basket after basket there filled with these browny green and violet colored hedgehogs of the deep. They are deftly opened by the fishwives, the left hand being protected fishwives, the left hand being protected against the sharp prickles by a stout cloth wrapped around it, the stomach sack is cut out, and the fine orange colored eggs in the center exposed and handed upon the shell to the customers over ready for the dainty. These eggs are only to be found in the urchin between the months of October and May, that is about the same time as the oyster is in season. At other times the eggs are missing and many worthy people have pro-nounced the creature good for nothing be-cause they happened to capture and open it at the wrong season of the year.

The urchin fishery, owing to the great demand for the crustacean in southern Europe, is one of the most important in the Mediterranean. The creatures frequent rocky ground, and in the form of round, prickly balls, they are found, hundreds to-gether, a few feet below high water mark in the shoals of the Spanish, French and Italian coasts. They are captured by means of a cleft stick, with which the fisher pokes about their haunts, and often, too, by divers. In the bay of Naples nothing is more amusing than to watch the urchin fishers at work in search of their pray. Rowing to the spot where they are carrying on operations one in the water, and probably an equal number of pairs of legs, all belonging to bodies that are invisible. Suddealy a head will go down and a pair of legs come up; then, as unexpectedly, one of the pair of legs will go down and a head bob up. "A puzzling spectacle," says Mr. Jones, who has well described the fishery, "and a constant vicissitude from heels to heads and from heads to heels."-

The Wild Boar in Cuba.

A run of twenty rods brought us to the dog and a huge black boar, thirty feet away which had turned to protect the retreat of a bord of wild hogs scampering away behind. "Aqui esta un baraco oimaron!" ("Here is a wild boar!") shouted Jose, wild as the dog itself with delight. There stood the savage fellow, all head, bristling shoulders, legs, tail fellow, all head, bristling shoulders, legs, tail with plumy trembling end, jaws and tusks, champing and crackling his jaws, from which great rolls of foam were already working, with a hideous sucking sound, a splendid picture of ferocious brute bravery. To one side and another he sprang as the dog crowded him. Then he would charge the dog and whirl in the air, scattering the earth like an exploding shell. Closer and closer. like an exploding shell. Closer and closer crowded the two brutes, in air half the time, each bent on death, the dog frequently clear-ing the boar as a bound, and maddening him with savage mappings and lacerations of shoulders or hams. Over and under went the log with marvelous agility, frequently sending the boar four feet into the air, but every harge from the dog brought a still thore savage countercharge from the boar.

I believe no such agile and ferecious movements were ever elsewhere seen. For forty feet in every direction the forest ground looked like a freshly plowed field, and it seemed to my startled eyes as though a cyclone of dog, boar, mud, bark and froth had descended into the darkening covert. I frankly confess to flight to a near faller, the frankly confess to flight to a near fallen tree upon which, to escape less than hanging, I do not believe I could have ordinarily vaulted. The Don and Jose became apparently a part of the cyclone, though no mortal eyes could have followed their movements or eyes could have followed their movements or gymnastics. I do not know how long this hasted. I saw a flash of fire, and through the roar of it all heard a shot. Then the whirlwind seemed to fall upon Jose. I saw the gleam of his machete somewhere in its very core. Them a Cuban yell went up that set the tree limbs vibrating. We tied our grass woven thougs to the dead boar's shoulders and tusks, and when we had dragged him to the mountaineer's cabins great flecks of foam streaked with blood still lay upon the brave fellow's jagged ribs.—Edgar L. Wakman in Philadelphin Times.
